PROJECT OVERVIEW

SOMRA offers an innovative approach for tackling two major challenges of the 21st century, namely climate change and refugee crises, by engaging refugees, asylum seekers and migrants in meaningful occupations that transform them into environment role models with a sustainable impact in their new and previous home.

CHALLENGE

Climate change and the current refugee crises are two of the most challenging issues affecting people on a global scale. Despite the various efforts made to respond to these imminent topics, there is still no guarantee solution. The need for all of us to contribute to a more environmentally friendly future, regardless of class, socioeconomic background, career, geographical location and educational background is imminent.

The SOMRA project offers a path where both challenges are met by providing refugees with meaningful occupations that transform them into environment role-models with a sustainable impact.

GOALS

SOMRA aims at engaging refugees, asylum seekers and migrants in meaningful occupations that transform them into environment role models with a sustainable impact in their new and previous home.

Through this approach the SOMRA consortium makes efforts for these people to become true factors of change that influence positive environmental habits that are first established on a local and regional level, and eventually even beyond the borders of the EU.

AIMS & OBJECTIVES

SOMRA aims to pursue the following objectives:

- Facilitating environmental change on local and regional levels through grassroots activities organised by green NGOs and the SOMRA participants;
- Fostering common values and civic engagement of migrant communities in their new environment;
- Offering low-threshold learning opportunities related to environmental measures that increase the employability by strengthening key competences for migrants, refugees and asylum seekers.
